New Field for Adversisers.
Not even heaven itself is sacred to the advertiser and the Milky Way is about to become a valuable advertising medium. The other night at Ealing, a towa half way between London and Windsor, an enterprising genius, rejoicing in the name of Sidney Hodges, succeeded in projecting a large and highly luminous letter on the sky by some means of his own invention and demonstrated to an interested party of spectators that with the electric light there would be no difficulty on a favorable night in displaying, not only letters, but words and signals in the same fashion. The heavens will soon be telling, besides their own story, one of certain people's soop, or liver pills, or porous plasters. To what extent this new branch of advertising enterprise will interfere with the science of astronomy can only be loft to he imagination.
